The India of the early twenty-first century is, therefore, a substantially different entity from that described and discussed in the first eight chapters of this book. Although the term the Indian subcontinent 'retains a vestigial usage, particularly in Britain, it is more common these days to speak, more neutrally, of South Asia 'and of the South Asians' for whom it is, or ancestrally was, home in the popular imagination at least, India has come less to define a civilization than to demarcate a state. But with the ever-growing distance from the colonial past and with the creation of an independent Bangladesh in 1971 (the two successor states thus transmuted into three, it has become increasingly difficult to maintain the idea of an India that still residually occupies the some geographical arena and socio-cultural space as once occupied by the India of the Buddha and Ashoka, the Guptas, the Cholas, the Mughals and the British, or even that so ardently aspired to by the Indian nationalist movement. We now live with another India.

Sangiumvibool, P & Chonglertham, S. (2016). Performance based budgeting for continuing and lifelong education services: The Thai higher education perspective. Journal of Higher Education Policy and Management, 39 (1); 58 – 74.

Sangiumvibool, P & Chonglertham, S. (2016) analyzed the importance of performance-based budgeting. The study focused on the factors influencing the budgetary decision-making process. The author explained that the Thai government had implemented budget reforms in higher education sector in two different phases. The first phase is a non-financial phase and the second phase is a financial phase. As part of these reforms, the Thai government had enforced performance – based budgeting system. Under the new budgeting system, the administrators had to consider the budget expenditure and should ensure that they are consistent with the university’s objective. The factors identified for the study were student head count, educational projects and programs, number of faculty, graduate students and administrative staff. The study found that student head count, economic conditions or political influence had no direct influence on Thai universities’ budgetary expenditure, but the public university had to rely on government funding. The author suggested that the implementation of performance-based budgeting system should reduce the managerial costs on budgetary revision process during a year.
